article

When an ex Cisco engineer decided to cause harm by deleting 456 virtual machines, it was no accident.

In times of pandemic, there is a clear sign of distress. You can see it on people's faces. you can hear it in their voices, and now, people jobs have been taken away.

But what does it mean to those employees who lost their job? What risks could they present to themselves to the organisation?

In this article, we discuss the challenges organisations face when they off-board employees and what the possible risks need to be considered so that it can best be mitigated.
