Let me ask you a question. Do you contract a 3rd party organisation for services?

The use of 3rd party organisation in our business is so common in today's business and often referred to as "trusted business partners".

And while these trusted business partners provide great value, expertise, resources and cost savings, yet the nature of their services requires the organisation to provide them with authorised access to proprietary data, critical files, and/or internal infrastructure.

So, what could possibly go wrong? According to the Insider Threat Division of CERT, around 15% to 25% of insider threats were committed by trusted business partners.

If you have relationships with trusted business partners, this article will then be highly informative and valuable. Not only, will it help you identify the possible type of risks that trusted business partners can perpetrate within your business but also provide you with suggested recommendations and mitigation.
